

The waters around Belize have over 200 miles of beautiful flats, perfect for some of the most spectacular fly fishing in the world. The abundance of bonefish, tarpon, permit and snook – also known as a “super slam” – make the entire country of Belize a fisherman’s paradise. Permit, bonefish, and tarpon are the marquee species anglers cross the globe to catch in the flats off the coasts of the cayes and mainland. Throughout the waterways of the country, anglers will find success. While the northern cayes and inlets have established themselves as the dominant fishing posts, the southern regions extending from Placencia to Punta Gorda are quickly gaining a reputation in international fly fishing circles
