

All Belizean national parks have hiking trails that showcase the birdlife and fine examples of local plants and animals.

Most trails are designed in loops easily bringing visitors back to the starting point and will have the activity level clearly marked. Some places have self guiding trails with a guide while the favored choice is via the use of a local guide who will point out the spontaneous appearance of birds and wildlife and can relate traditional uses of local plants.